HYDROLATS AND AROMATIC WATERS

The hydrolat or distilled water, transformed into steam, is passed through the plant or part of it cut and extrapolates the active ingredients. The steam is then cooled in a coil and is transformed back into a mixture of water and essences.

The essences, or essential oils, are taken but the water, in this process, is enriched with the water-soluble active ingredients of the plant and becomes hydrolat.

The waters are used both for food preparations and for cosmetic use, especially loved by those who do not like the alcohol of perfumes and / or want a delicate product.
